DETAILED ACTION

This action is responsive to applicant's amendment and arguments of 7/1/2008, which have been entered into the electronic file of record.

It is noted that examiner Daniel Hess has replaced examiner Lisa Caputo as the examiner of record in the present case. It is further noted that examiner Hess must withdraw indications of allowability made by Miss Caputo. Because of a change in the position of the Office, the present action is non-final.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

Claims 1, 3, 9-13, 16-20 and 38-42 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Spitz (US 5,633,488).

Re claim 1: Spitz teaches makes a very general statement of barcodes that clearly demonstrates that the invention as claimed is non-patentable (column 1, line 16):

“Virtually every retail product marketed in supermarkets, retail stores, discount outlets, as well as many other establishments, utilize bar code symbols at their point-of-sale terminals, to monitor inventory levels, to generate orders for low inventory items, etc. Parcel post companies rely heavily on the use of bar code indicia to monitor the location and status of packages in transit.”

A barcode is on an item. At a point of sale, the barcode will be sensed and this will be used to update the product status. In the above example, the inventory level of the item would be reduced if an item is sensed as being purchased and this is of course a change in the status of that item at some data store.

All that is lacking in this excerpt of Spitz is 'a plurality of coded data portions' but this it is well-known that many products have multiple copies of a barcode on different faces so that it is easier to scan at checkout.

In view of this, the 'plurality of coded data portions' on a product would have been obvious to make the checkout easier.

Re claims 3, 16, 17, 38-42: See discussion re claim 1, above.

Re claims 9, 11, 12: Barcodes can be employed to track items both in terms of adding inventory (such as returns or new shipments) and removing inventory (i.e. by purchase at POS). As such an inventory tracking system must be able to register both of these in association with barcode reads.

Re claim 10, 13: It is also known that cash registers typically have 'add' and 'remove' buttons such that a cashier can indicate an item has been purchased or remove this indication of purchasing. The cash register can broadly be considered part of the sensing device.

Re claims 18-20:

Spitz has discussed "utilize bar code symbols at their point-of-sale terminals, to monitor inventory levels, to generate orders for low inventory items." Of course the determination that it is necessary to generate a new order involves comparison with some threshold, a 'predetermined number.'

Conclusion

The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure.

Pandey et al. (US 20030235169) teaches (see for instance paragraph 0065) managing shopping lists and inventory and reshelving needs using a barcoding and communications system.
